Orlando, Florida - CampSoftware is proud to announce FMCode to provide a central place where FileMaker developers can share their code. The website shares documents, custom functions, and other resources to make FileMaker development easier.

"We've always wanted a place to share our code and learn techniques from other developers." said Hal Gumbert, owner of CampSoftware and the developer who designed the FMCode site.

The website has a mission to 'Share your FileMaker code...'. FMCode makes it easier for developers to share code and edit it in the future. Each developer has a 'My Code' page which lists all the code that each developer has added to FMCode. The site also makes finding code easier by including a global search to find specific code via keywords, title, or description.

"The response from the FileMaker developer community has been fantastic. FMCode grew from six listings to over three hundred in under two weeks. One developer, Stephen Dolenski from FMForums, added well over two hundred entries representing the standard FileMaker Functions." said Hal Gumbert.

The site is immediately available and free to everyone. All code is owned by the individual coder.
