

TextSoap 5.5.2 released

Published on 04/04/07

unmarked software offers up several great new features and improvements with its latest release. This release allows users to clean rich text with embedded graphics and simplifies creating, debugging, and sharing custom cleaners.

With TextSoap 5.5.2, users can now clean rich text that contain embedded graphics and embedded objects. TextSoap cleans up the text around the objects.

Users can now disable individual actions within a custom cleaner, making it easier to build and debug custom cleaners. Author Mark Munz commented "Before, if you wanted to see the results with or without a particular action running, you had to manually remove the action and re-add it. Now you can just toggle the action on or off."

Starting with version 5.5.2, users can now install shared custom cleaners from the internet (always with user's permission).

Mark Munz commented, "Like many Automator users, TextSoap users are often consumers, rather than creators, of text cleaners, so we wanted to simplify the process of installing shared custom cleaners. With this update, installing a shared custom cleaner from the web takes just two clicks."

This new release also addresses several issues reported by users, including a problem with Mac OS X sometimes assigning TextSoap as the default editor for MSWord documents.

TextSoap Deluxe 5.5 is the premier text transformation tool designed to make you more productive with all your text. It offers complete control of your text content and style.

TextSoap Deluxe is the only text processing tool that allows you to maintain the style information as your text is transformed. It also offers the ability to transform text based on its style, or style text based on its content. Integration options like Services Menu support, Contextual Menu and Application plug-ins allow you to use any features right within your favorite application, whether it is Mail, AppleWorks, BBEdit, Entourage, or TextEdit.
