London, United Kingdom - The Escapers is proud to announce the release of Flux 1.4, the latest version of their flagship web design application. Featuring a revised user interface, and many tweaks and fixes, Flux 1.4 serves as the foundation for the future of Flux. Alongside this new release of Flux, a new PDF manual has been created, which will be updated along with Flux. Flux remains compatible with Mac OS X 10.4 (Tiger), with Mac OS 10.5 (Leopard) strongly recommended.

Version 1.4 includes many user-requested improvements, bug fixes and UI enhancements. It also demonstrates The Escapers' commitment to providing constant improvements and updates to the user base free of charge. Flux 1.4 now also supports Komodo as an external editor, and speed improvements.

Javascript support has been improved also, with support for remote scripts, and inline code in the HTML headers for better support for using third party services such as E-Junkie.

The Escapers has worked closely with Flux users to mold Flux into the product they need, and will continue to do so for all future releases.

The Escapers also continues to work towards making Flux the no. 1 web development tool on the Mac by providing compatibility with leading edge tools like Yuma, jQuery and Adobe's Spry. The Escapers recognizes that the incredible pace of development on the web requires very frequent updates available to all users, and not paid-for revisions every year or 18 months.

Due to pressure from the US Dollar, Flux is now being marketed for sale in UK Pounds S for free to all Flux users. Flux is of course, still available internationally, and sales have been moved to a new service for a more convenient way to buy.
