Vancouver, Washington - unmarked software announced TextSoap 6.1, an update to their award winning text processing utility for Mac OS X. TextSoap 6.1 includes several new key features and more than two dozen fixes and improvements. TextSoap 6.1 introduces textsoapAgent scripting. This is a significant advancement over the original scripting support (via the Scripting Addition). textsoapAgent scripting allows script writer to directly access the core features of TextSoap.

For example, script users now have access to the list of groups as well as a list of cleaners for a group allowing them to custom build a user interface to TextSoap with any Mac OS X scripting language. Enhanced commands also support the cleaning of script text, the contents of the user's clipboard and specified text files. For quick work, script users can easily bring up a palette (with group support) with a single script command.
