Stockholm, Sweden - Catch celebrity chefs Gordon Ramsay and Marco Pierre White in action this Christmas in a free shooting game launched by Mad Chef Productions, an Indie developer company located in Stockholm, Sweden. Now available at the iTunes App Store, this interesting food game is the perfect recipe for fun gaming during the holidays. It's not only on TV where all the action happens; many chefs have plenty of crazy real life stories to narrate.

The team interacted with chefs across various Facebook groups and enquired what their favorite objects that they had thrown or wanted to toss during their career were. Based on these answers, the team designed the game in a very short time and the inventory of Mad Chef includes over 20 outrageous items such as kitchen knives, potatoes, plates, frozen fish, blow torches, bottles, the kitchen stereo, and much more.

Mad Chef Productions brings people the best of both worlds, a game that can be played on any iOS device while allowing them to become their favorite mad and crazy chefs who have been a part of popular TV and DVD food series. To spice things up, the team created a Blood mode apart from a unique Zombie mode for users who wanted to take the game a step further.

Founder, Soren Andersson says, "With a background in the restaurant business, I wanted to create a game as a tribute to the love-hate relationship between chefs and waiters while including the old school chefs that we all have seen in popular TV shows like Hell's Kitchen and Kitchen Nightmares among many other episodes."

Available on all iOS mobile devices, Mad Chef comes with excellent retina gfx and professional custom design, making this game an upcoming iTunes classic. Mad Chef is the game to play on iTunes during the holidays for those who dream of striking the Chef's bell while speaking in a French accent and throwing whatever item is closest to them at waiters or guests.
