

Cowbeam now available for Mac OS in Apocalypse update

Published on 12/20/12

To celebrate the end of the world Digital Dreams releases "Cowbeam" for Mac OS along with a short trailer of how the world is coming to its end. Cowbeam can best be described as singleplayer "Who is it?" with planets instead of faces. You need to gather hints that point you towards the right planet where a cow resides. These hints range from the planet's color to its size, and from the vegetation to the amount of moons orbiting around the planet.

Utrecht, Netherlands - After its successful release on iOS, Digital Dreams today is proud to announce Cowbeam is now making its debut on Mac OS in even higher definition! To let everyone enjoy themselves at the end of the world, the price from Cowbeam dropped for iOS and a new apocalypse playmode is released.

Cowbeam is available to download from the Mac App Store and the iOS App Store as a universal app in HD for iPhone, iPod touch and iPad. The game is priced at $2.99,- USD/Euro2.69,- EUR for Mac OS and $0.99,- USD/Euro0.89,- EUR for the smaller iOS version.

Cowbeam can best be described as singleplayer "Who is it?" with planets instead of faces. You need to gather hints that point you towards the right planet where a cow resides. These hints range from the planet's color to its size, and from the vegetation to the amount of moons orbiting around the planet.

Finding the cow is not all that matters, you'll also want to find stars, hidden within the solar systems. These are used to unlock new levels and upgrades, preparing you for the more difficult levels ahead. The cows you find are stored in canisters and become a colorful collection. There are even some very special cows to be found throughout these galaxies.

Apocalypse Mode is a free new gamemode in Cowbeam where hints are only visible for a brief amount of time forcing the player to remember the hints he/she has gathered. Furthermore there is a new achievement if you complete all levels on Apocalypse Mode! The Apocalypse mode is perfect for the advanced player. Are you up for the challenge?
