Cupertino, California - Gamers who want to enter the world of a heroic firefighter and douse flames before they spread beyond control, can now download the innovative new firefighting simulation app FireFight from Impossible Visions.

FireFight challenges gamers to put out fires in a variety of different scenarios, including: city blocks, skyscrapers, bush fires, airplanes, ships and oil rigs. As they battle the flames, they'll see a counter that displays how many people they've saved - and how many they've been unable to save.

Plus, since each level's score adds up, Gamers can upload their total combined score to the Game Center, and enjoy some friendly competition against friends and others around the world. They can also easily post screenshots and scores to Facebook.

However, what makes FireFight truly stand out - and incredibly addictive and memorable - is the combination of great gameplay, sound and graphics. These all blend to make the experience gripping and intense. Within seconds, gamers are transported into a world where lives are on the line, and it's up to them - and them alone - to keep people and property safe.

"Our other apps have been downloaded over 2 million times, and so as a company we have a very clear idea of what gamers want and what really excites them," commented Richard Arnold of Impossible Visions. "And that's why we designed FireFight to be fun, challenging and instantly playable. It takes quite a while to master the game - which is a good thing - but gamers don't have to worry about spending hours just to figure out how to play. Within seconds, they'll be putting out their first fire, and be well on their way to the next big challenge."
