

Hit The Lights - Easy to learn, hard to master laser puzzle for iPhone

Published on 08/14/13

Hit The Lights by XPerienced is a laser puzzle solving game for iPhone with a gameplay that reminds of and old, good "The Incredible Machine" series. Combined with a stunning, cartoon graphics, polished user experience and original music by famous guitar teacher Justin Sandercoe it guarantees a fun and challenging entertainment for many hours. The difficulty of levels is tailored in a way that helps players get used to game mechanics at first and difficulty of each next level graduates.

Warsaw, Poland - XPerienced today is proud to introduce Hit The Lights 1.1, an update to its laser puzzle game.

The goal of each level is to connect light emitters with corresponding receptors. This might sound easy at first, but later on the game gets more challenging as you will need to learn how to properly use available game pieces to achieve each level's goal. A mirror is the main piece in your toolbox, but there are more like splitters, prisms and color filters that will help you mix and match the colors of emitters with correct receptors.

The difficulty of levels is tailored in a way that helps players get used to game mechanics at first, and a difficulty of each next level graduates well making a gameplay challenging and entertaining as well. With a help of Albertino, a friendly physicist and a main character of a game that introduces every new aspect of a gameplay, you can earn more points and graduate to next stages - from Schoolboy to PhD.
