

Random Ideas announces What's Goin Down 2.0 for iPhone and iPod Touch

Published on 07/07/09

Random Ideas, LLC today announced the release of What's Goin Down 2.0 for iPhone and iPod Touch. What's Goin Down is a sophisticated, professional grade TCP server network monitoring tool. It allows you to test network connectivity to virtually any TCP based network service, including HTTP, HTTPS, POP, IMAP, SSH and SMTP, and can be used over WiFi, 3G, or Edge network connectivity.

Gilbert, Arizona - Random Ideas, LLC today announced the release of What's Goin Down 2.0 for iPhone and iPod Touch. What's Goin Down is available for download for just $4.99 from Apple's App Store and can be purchased through iTunes or through the App Store directly on the device itself. What's Goin Down is available in all the countries that the App Store services, and is fully compatible with iPhone OS 3.0, and the new iPhone 3GS.

What's Goin Down is a professional grade TCP server network monitoring tool built specifically for iPhone OS. Using it, you configure your servers host names and ports, then What's Goin Down connects to them to verify that the services are running and healthy. It is fully compatible with any and all TCP based network services including HTTP, HTTPS, POP, IMAP, SSH and SMTP, and can be used over WiFi, 3G, or Edge network connectivity.

Version 2.0 of What's Goin Down brings with it an entirely redesigned UI, designed to speed your workflow when entering servers by grouping services from the same host in one location. It also adds the ability to store and graph up to 10 of the last results for each service so that you can graphically see your connection latency. Additionally, it adds the ability to associate customized badge icons with particular servers.

Jiva DeVoe, the company's founder and Chief Software Craftsman said "This version of What's Goin Down integrates a lot of our customer's feedback. As a result, it brings a much cleaner user experience and a much richer set of tools to this already great application. It also paves the way for us to add more improvements to it in the near future. We're really glad to have an opportunity to bring real, professional networking tools to the iPhone platform."
