Version 1.1.1 features sharing of photos on websites by providing the HTML source, interface and speed-improvements and more than 30 bug fixes.

Vienna, Austria - Eternal Storms Software today announced the immediate availability of a maintenance update for flickery, advancing it to version 1.1.1. flickery is a unique desktop flickr client for Mac OS X 10.5 which combines the flickr photo-community with the ease-of-use and elegance of Mac OS X. flickery 1.1.1 features sharing of photos on websites and blogs by providing the HTML source, interface- and speed-improvements and more than thirty bug fixes.

With flickery, you can easily upload photos to your flickr photostream (featuring photo editing capabilities like resizing, cropping, rotating or applying filters, so you won't have to switch to another application for preparing your photos for upload as well as the ability to take screenshots of your desktop or snapshots), organize photos in photosets and groups, browse your favorites and add to them, check out the gorgeous photos available in "Explore" and take a look at your contacts' photos, photosets or favorites. Search the entire flickr database for a particular shot. Browse all the Groups you have joined. flickery lets you do it all.

New features in version 1.1.1 include:

- * Sharing of photos with HTML code for websites and blogs
- * Improved searching capabilities
- * Now includes a 64-bit Intel binary

Furthermore, this version of flickery includes over 30 bugfixes and smaller improvements throughout the application. For a more detailed list of changes, please refer to the release notes.

"After less than 4 months on the market, flickery has already become a much-used client for the flickr platform" said Matthias Gansrigler of Eternal Storms Software. "The improved search functionality and being able to view fifty instead of thirty of a users' contacts' recently uploaded photos both have been highly anticipated. We're delighted and thrilled we are able to deliver this today."

"We're very proud of what flickery has already become in this short amount of time and want everyone who owns a Mac and uses flickr to give flickery a try. So with version 1.1.1, we're adding 7 days to the trial period for everyone who already has exceeded the normal 15-day trial."

Since software is an ongoing process of improvement and change, we at Eternal Storms Software are looking forward to lots of feedback and requests for our products from our valued customers - we're always reachable. For the user's convenience, there are screencasts available to help learn flickery's functionality. Screencasts demonstrating new functionality will be available soon.

System requirements:

- * Mac OS X 10.5 Leopard, Universal Binary
- * For flickery to run, an internet connection is mandatory

prMac: Publish Once, Broadcast the World :: <http://prmac.com>

* A flickr account is not necessary, but highly recommended

Pricing and Availability:

flickery has a 15-day fully functional trial available. For users that have already exceeded the 15-day trial period, this update adds seven more days to test the new version. After the trial period has passed, users can purchase the application for $19.20 or 14.90 Euro. It comes as a free update for existing customers. Members of MacHeist who have received flickery as a gift can purchase an upgrade at a discounted price of $9.95 or 7.50 Euro to be able to update.
