

Nano Mania Blends Art and Science to Create Challenging New Arcade Game

Published on 01/09/14

In Nano Mania from KROGNI, users must influence the behavior of nanoparticles by skilfully charging, exploding, shrinking or splitting them, as they work towards creating enough nano fuel molecules to launch their rocket and blast off to the next level. It lets users create a unique experience that promises to be different every time. The app festures stunning HD graphics, a very cool electronica-inspired soundtrack, and is available for both iOS and Android users in the App Store & Google Play.

Cupertino, California - iOS and Android users looking for a totally different gaming experience that brilliantly blends science and art, can now download Nano Mania from KROGNI and get ready for hour after hour of addictive, challenging and fun gameplay.

Unlike ordinary and forgettable arcade-style apps, Nano Mania lets users create a unique experience that promises to be different every time - and from every other player.

Gameplay is intuitive and elegant: users must influence the behavior of nanoparticles (atoms) by skilfully charging, exploding, shrinking or splitting them. If they're successful in their efforts, they'll be able to charge enough atoms to create nano fuel molecules, and use them to launch their rocket and blast off to the next level.

Along the way, users are engaged by stunning HD graphics, and a very cool electronica-inspired soundtrack that can be muted for late-night marathon gaming sessions. They can also keep a watchful eye on their score, and toggle between multiple languages, including English, French, German, Korean, Japanese, Chinese, Dutch and Russian.

"With Nano Mania, we wanted to create something that iOS and Android users would find enjoyable and challenging - instead of repetitive and boring," commented Egor Krupnov of KROGNI. "At the same time, we wanted to introduce a cool scientific element to the gaming experience, which is totally missing from most arcade games. It's the perfect app for users of all ages, and we'll be adding new, exciting features and updates all the time!"

Nano Mania, the unique arcade game that blends art and science in a challenging, addictive and fun new way, is available from App Store and Google Play.
