Bluestratus announces KarateHero, a social martial arts game that lets you train your own character from white belt to black belt. The game features both single player and multiplayer game modes. Through 7 martial arts challenges, players can train their character to work their way up from white belt to black belt karate masters. Version 1.1 which allows users to challenge any friend to a virtual karate match. KarateHero is available for iPhone, iPad and iPod touch.

Southampton, United Kingdom - Bluestratus is thrilled to announce KarateHero, a social martial arts game that lets you train your own character from white belt to black belt. Players can also challenge friends through Facebook or Email to see who's the ultimate karate master.

A lot of effort into making a game that was quick and easy to pick up and play, yet deep enough for longer gaming sessions by allowing players to level up their characters. In addition to versatile gameplay, Karate Hero feature gorgeous hand drawn graphics and animations. Southampton based Bluestratus team feel they have something really special on their hands and they hope you will too. Previously limited to Facebook friends, this new version now allows players to challenge any friend to exciting virtual karate matches for countless hours of fun and competitive gameplay.

Karate Hero is a unique, social fighting game that features both single player and multiplayer game modes. Through 7 martial arts challenges, players can train their character to become better fighters and eventually work their way from white belt to black belt karate masters. Once they've built up their skills, players can challenge friends through Facebook or email to intense fighting matches and determine who is the ultimate warrior!

Speaking of this newly expanded social component, KarateHero's developer Mike Zriel had this to say: "After popular demand, we have added the ability to fight with your friends who are not on Facebook and Facebook is no longer required to Spar, although it does make it easy to pick a fight!"
