

Realore Begins Beta Test of Warhunger

Published on 12/08/14

Realore starts an open beta of its new iOS strategy game Warhunger. In the app players will be able to train an army and lead attacks against other players, as well as build a powerful fortress to defend themselves. There are two playable factions in the game, each with a unique set of building units and heroes. Players, who would like to get their hands on the game before everyone else does, are welcome to participate by registering at the Warhunger official page.

Klaipeda, Lithuania - Warhunger is a brand new mobile strategy game from Realore. Today it enters open beta on iPads. Warhunger lets players become a general on the front line of a centuries-long war between two fantasy kingdoms. At the beginning of the game players are able to choose between two factions. The noble knights of the human kingdom are advanced in steam-powered technology. The alliance of the demons and the undead uses the knowledge of ancient magic as a weapon.

To protect valuable resources players are encouraged to build a mighty castle full of cannons, flamethrowers and deadly traps. In order to steal resources from others players will have to learn how to train mighty armies. All available units have their own strengths and weaknesses and perfect balance is a key to victory. Armies are led into battle by mighty heroes. These powerful units are able to deal great amount of damage and cast powerful spells. Players can train them to learn new moves and get access to advanced tactics.

Strategic map offers another layer of interaction with the game. Successful attacks give players chance to get taxes from the cities under control. The better players lead their armies, the more gold they will get from looting and taxation.

Players, who would like to get their hands on the game before everyone else does, are welcome to participate. To register for the beta players should go to the official page of Warhunger and follow the instructions.
