Published on 04/23/15

UK based app developer, Rory Buckley today is proud to announce Weather Pod 2.2 for iOS, a major update to his popular weather app supporting live conditions, forecasts and storm alerts. Weather Pod balances visual simplicity with advanced weather intelligence to give the user fast, accurate and frequently updated weather information, based on their current location. Version 2.2 arrives to the App Store with a stunning new look, more features and uniquely flowing swipe & touch functionality.

Devon, United Kingdom - App developer, Rory Buckley today is proud to announce Weather Pod 2.2 (Live Conditions, Forecasts & Storm Alerts), a major update to his popular weather app for iOS devices. Version 2.2 arrives to the App Store with a stunning new look, more features and uniquely flowing swipe & touch functionality.

Since being released, Weather Pod has achieved some notable goals, such as topping App Store charts and receiving mentions and recommendations from many trusted blogs and tech review websites. From the very beginning Weather Pod stood out from the crowd with quick and simple weather discovery. As the years have passed, Rory Buckley has been keen to add many more features to the app while still keeping the simple flowing side of the app alive.

Version 2.2 has had a major visual makeover with a new light, glowing and crisp appearance. A new hourly precipitation chart feature has been added, giving the user a detailed breakdown of when there will most likely be rain (or snow/sleet) within the next 24 hours. The main swipe & touch navigation functionality has been rebuilt for a much improved flowing performance. The much needed function of being able to save your chosen location has also been added.

"When it comes to weather apps, Weather Pod certainly has a unique edge on its competitors," stated Rory Buckley, developer of Weather Pod. "Our vision from the very beginning was for a alternative and 'cool' weather discovery experience and version 2.2 certainly does reflect this vision."
