Atlantic Beach, Florida - Atlantic Beach, Florida - Tropical Software today announced that the first Public beta of iAddressX 3.6 is now available. Use iAddressX to navigate contacts from a small icon in the system menu, and to initiate various tasks including printing of Dymo labels, dialing regular and Skype calls, sending SMS messages to Skype pals or friend's cell phones, and more.

A Brief History of iAddressX:

Tropical Software President James Lee explains the return of iAddressX: "iAddressX was developed by Michael Balle-Pedersen, a Software Engineer at Apple Inc. Before he worked at Apple. Michael released versions running in Mac OS X 10.3 and 10.4. I discovered iAddressX languishing after Michael went to work for Apple and we were able to acquire iAddressX. We immediately developed a version that ran under Mac OS X 10.5 (Leopard) that is still available. Thanks to some help from friend and Apple software wizard John Daub we are now able to get iAddressX working in Mac OS X 10.7 through 10.10. In-house expert Lewis Garrett inserted the Check for Update and Registration code, and put the final touches on this release."

Menubar Convenience and iAddressX:

The main menu bar, also called the system menu, has been a main feature of Macintosh computers since the Mac's inception. iAddressX has now returned to the system menu as a status item, allowing easy access to almost everything related to contact from hierarchical menus.

* Navigate Contacts

Navigate contacts from a small icon in the system menu and access many contact options.

* Dymo Support

Print to your Dymo Label printer right from iAddressX.

* Dial

Dial using Bluetooth, a USB Modem, Skype or an old-fashioned landline.

* Search

Search your contacts directly from the menu bar.

* Skype

Full support to initiate a call or chat using Skype.

iAddressX- Reviews:

iAddressX was reviewed a few times many years ago and we hope it will once again get good reviews for its design and convenience. Nevertheless, for now we are looking for feedback from prior iAddressX customers and new users for what they would like to see us develop in the future.
