Collide Apps has released Collide 1.0.2, the mobile dating app for iOS devices designed to help Christian singles connect. With an estimated 2.18 billion Christians worldwide, Collide's goal is to help Christian singles form meaningful and deep connections in their search for love. Users login via their Facebook account and view other Christian singles, whom they can then either "like" or "pass" on. If both users "like" each other, they'll be connected via private chat.

San Francisco, California - Collide Apps is pleased to announce the release of Collide 1.0.2 for iOS, the mobile dating app designed to help Christian singles connect. With an estimated 2.18 billion Christians worldwide, Collide's goal is to help Christian singles form meaningful and deep connections in their search for love.

"We believe that having similar values and the same religious background creates a stronger level of comfort and helps to create deeper connections among Christian singles," says Steven Gaan, co-founder of Collide.

Here's how it works: The user logs in with their Facebook account and sees another single Christian user in the app. They can view the user's profile, viewing information such as their age and favorite bible verse, and they can then choose to "like" or "pass" on that person. If both people "like" each other, they'll be connected through a private chat. There are additional premium features available via in-app purchase, including filtering by and viewing denominations, seeing the distance of the user and viewing mutual friends.

"We believe our members will love being able to connect with people who belong in similar communities," says Nelson Wang, co-founder of Collide.
