iPhone developer Nor Eagle today released a teaser trailer for their upcoming iPhone Application, Insulting Monk. While the teaser reveals little about the app apart from the title its self-deprecating nature is designed to get a few chuckles. Ben's somewhat spiffy-looking but ultimately craptastic rock-paper-scissors game, featured the insulting monk who was insulting the gamer at the end of each game.

Oslo, Norway - Nor Eagle today released a teaser trailer for their upcoming iPhone app "Insulting Monk". While the teaser reveals little about the app apart from the title its self-deprecating nature is designed to get a few chuckles.

T. Benjamin Larsen, Nor Eagle CEO, Creative Director and hand-model had this to say about the teaser: "I think it's fitting for the nature of the app." Asked to share a few more details about the Insulting Monk he declined: "That would kind of go against the whole idea of releasing a teaser in the first place. I guess people who bought our last title will have a fairly good idea though!" The title he referred to, Ben's somewhat spiffy-looking but ultimately craptastic rock-paper-scissors game, featured the insulting monk who was insulting the gamer at the end of each game.

"Apart from the title, the Monk character was the thing most people seemed to like about the game, so it made perfect sense to build our next app around him." Larsen continued.

"Insulting Monk should be available sooner rather than later though and we might share some additional information through Twitter before its release. People should really follow us there if they want to know... we might actually make it worthwhile..." he finished on a somewhat mysterious note.
