Atomic Bird announces MondoMouse 1.3

Major update brings improved user interface, expanded configuration.

Colorado Springs, Colorado (February 8, 2007) - Atomic Bird, LLC, announced today the immediate availability of MondoMouse 1.3 for Mac OS X 10.4.

MondoMouse is an innovative user interface and productivity enhancement for Mac OS X. With MondoMouse installed, windows in most applications can be moved or resized at any time, without moving the mouse to the window's title bar or resize handle. Even if the window is behind other windows at the time-- just point your mouse at a window and MondoMouse gives you control over it. MondoMouse also identifies partially-hidden windows, indicating application and window name for any window on the screen. Find the right window instantly even if dozens of windows are open. Additionally MondoMouse includes a focus-follows-mouse option with which you can switch windows and applications just by pointing the mouse at the window you want.

Animated demonstrations of these features can be found at the Atomic Bird web site.

MondoMouse was awarded 3.5 mice in Macworld's December 2006 issue. MondoMouse was originally written as an entry in the Iron Coder contest for Mac OS X software developers, in March 2006. Although it did not win, it is the first publicly-available application to develop from an Iron Coder entry.

Version 1.3 adds significant user interface and configuration options. MondoMouse is available directly from Atomic Bird at <http://www.atomicbird.com> for only US$14.95. It may be used for free during a 30-day trial period. Version 1.3 is a free upgrade for owners of earlier versions.
