

BotCast Now Available on iOS and Android - Become a Feed Jockey

Published on 10/04/16

California based Hatch Networks releases BotCast 1.0.2, its content delivery platform for iOS and Android devices. Take control of your feeds from news, blogs, tweets and friends. BotCast allows users to create feeds (bots) that combine content from multiple sources including RSS, Twitter, and search. BotCast comes with hundreds of preconfigured bots covering sports, entertainment, news, politics, technology, science, and more. Users have the ability to configure their own bots as well.

Los Altos, California - Hatch Networks is proud to announce the release of BotCast 1.0.2, the company's content delivery platform developed for iOS and Android devices. BotCast knows you love feeds but why should the largest companies in the world tell you what to read. 2016 Election. Sports. Celebrities. Technology. Business. Politics. Photography. Travel. Hobbies. No matter what your passion is, BotCast keeps you informed by scouring the web and sending you personal updates on your interests when you want them while connecting you, if you'd like, to others who share your passion.

The first release of BotCast consists of three types of Bots:

- * RSS Bots that monitor an RSS feed and optionally filter based on keywords
- * Twitter Bots that monitor a Twitter feed and optionally filter based on keywords
- * Web Search Bots that monitor a search term and add content to your feed when new items are found

BotCast allows you to:

- * Add multiple bots to a single feed to get a variety of content from multiple sources
- * Create private feeds that you can share with your friends
- * Create public feeds that you can share with the public to build a community
- * Add your own content, such as text, photos, and video to a feed
- * Subscribe to public feeds
- * Configure your own bots
- * Discuss posts with your friends or the community
- * Adjust notifications based on whether content is generated by a bot or a person
