UK based Raaza Ltd. today introduces BlipWall 1.0, the company's new photography application for Mac OS. BlipWall allows anyone to create desktop wallpaper from a random selection of their Facebook photos. The app sits in the background and creates a new collage of random photos at regular intervals, without any work from the user. It provides a novel way to recall forgotten memory blips by randomly surfacing Facebook photos as Mac OS desktop wallpaper.

London, United Kingdom - Today sees the launch of BlipWall for MacOS, the new app from Raaza that creates desktop wallpaper from a random selection of your Facebook photos. BlipWall provides a novel way to recall forgotten memory blips by randomly surfacing Facebook photos on your MacOS desktop wallpaper.

The BlipWall app sits in the background and creates a new collage of random photos at regular intervals, without any work from the user. Every now and then the MacOS desktop is updated with a new selection of forgotten memories.

Users of the BlipWall app can choose the update interval, whether it be 1 hour or 24, and can also save and share the collages created by the app. BlipWall makes use of all your Facebook photo albums for maximum exposure of old memories. It can also make use of multiple displays if the user has multiple screens. Further improvements can be expected, such as integration with other social platforms and additional sharing options.

"BlipWall represents our first foray into the MacOS market after having produced multiple apps for iOS," explained Richard Rauser, founder of London based Raaza Ltd. "The app is totally free and available now worldwide in the Mac App Store. Get BlipWall now."
