

Dr. Ish Major Endorses Key of Life Medical and Health App

Published on 04/09/19

Renowned physician and WeTV's Marriage Bootcamp host, Dr. Ish Major endorses Key of Life, a comprehensive medical record-keeping app for patients and their families. Key Of Life was specifically developed to provide patients with a medical records storage option that can be shared with anyone. Users can maintain, record, track, and update their medical information, and share their records with family, loved ones, physicians, specialists, first responders, or anyone else of their choosing.

Fleming Island, Florida - Renowned physician and WeTV's Marriage Bootcamp host, Dr. Ish Major endorsed medical and health app, Key of Life on Twitter, Instagram and Facebook this week. The relationship doctor boosted about the app's capability of improving relations between loved ones by taking care of health issues first.

"Taking care of yourself and your health is important," tweeted Major. "I recommend @KeyofLifeApp1 to keep your medical records organized."

Key of Life functions as database for an individual's medical records. The easy-to-use app allows medical record access to loved ones, caretakers, first responders, or anyone the user chooses. It can be utilized as an organizational tool for parents to store, update and share their children's medical history.

"We're very grateful for Dr. Ish Major's kind words about our app," said Chad Anfinson, Key of Life founder. "And we look forward to Key of Life making medical records organization much easier for people across the country."

Key of Life founder, Chad Anfinson realized the need for Key of Life app when he became the primary caretaker for his aging father. He struggled to keep his father's medical records conveniently accessible and organized. The innovation behind this app is a merging of technology and a need to provide attentive care for loved ones.
