Christchurch, New Zealand - Long View Labs Limited today is proud to announce the release of Proverbidioms 2.0.0 for IOS and Android. Proverbidioms is based on the famous 'Proverbidioms' series of paintings by American artist T. E. Breitenbach that illustrate hundreds of everyday English idioms painted literally such as "break the ice", "ants in the pants" and "butterflies in the stomach." The aim of the game is for players to find as many idioms as they can using a built-in guided list.

The first Proverbidioms painting was completed in 1975 and published as a poster in 1980, when it became an instant hit, selling hundreds of thousands of copies, and appearing on television, in books, and on jigsaw puzzles. Over the years additional Proverbidiom paintings were created. Now, as art meets the digital age, Proverbidioms the App for IOS and Android offers an exciting new interactive experience.

Each picture can be scrolled, swiped, and zoomed, allowing players to explore the colorful artwork in stunning HD detail. Hundreds of dynamic sounds coupled with animations bring the paintings to life to truly immerse the player into the world of Proverbidioms. Once players have successfully guessed an idiom, they are rewarded with the idiom's definition, usage, and fascinating origins, not to mention a big laugh, which makes the app entertaining as well as educational.

The game designer, Julian Stewart worked very closely with the artist in designing this app, to ensure a quality, entertaining product that lives up to the spirit of the original paintings, and which is perhaps a work of art all to itself.

Version 2.0.0 has been totally redesigned from the ground up with new and improved graphics and gameplay. A new brand new poster has been added, as well as an all-new reward system to unlock some levels and posters for free.
