

Social Networking Amps Up Card Drop 1.2 for iPhone

Published on 11/18/09

Kuyi Mobile today released Card Drop 1.2 for iPhone and iPod Touch users. Card Drop is the new millennium version of solitaire, but don't worry - it is definitely NOT your grandmother's card game. This app is a souped up version of that old classic. Solitaire on steroids, if you will. The addition of social networking to the already fast-paced, popular version of solitaire includes Twitter integration, which is a big hit with gamers.

Waretown, NJ - Announcing that Kuyi Mobile, the developers of Card Drop, have recently expanded features in their action paced version of the classic solitaire game. The addition amps up the player's involvement with the game by providing built-in social networking, including the popular Twitter platform.

Kuyi Mobile took a timeless favorite, added modern twists and produced a best selling iPhone and iPod Touch app that review gamers claim to play for hours at a stretch. Card drop is the new millennium version of solitaire, but don't worry - it is definitely NOT your grandmother's card game. This app is a souped up version of that old classic. Solitaire on steroids, if you will. One of Card Drop's calls to fame is the fact that players can stop mid-game and return to where they left off at a another time.

With the latest version including email challenges, Twittering and online leaderboards and contests, Kuyi Mobile expects to experience some nice growth in their niche in upcoming months. Meantime, fans of Card Drop are continuing to spread the word via the app's built-in social networking capabilities, which pretty much makes the developer's expectations a certainty.
