

Droplets 1.1 App for iPhone is an Easy Obsession

Published on 01/07/10

Titoo today released Droplets 1.1 for iPhone and iPod Touch users. While the game app is easy to play, users find that it is very difficult to put down. The simple interface means there's no complicated learning curve, making it faster to become totally involved in trying to get the droplets to hit their correspondingly colored puddle. This app quickly becomes a fun and easy obsession. It has been tested and two-year-old approved for fun and learning.

Waretown, NJ - Announcing that Titoo, the developers of Droplets, have released version 1.1 for the iPhone and iPod Touch. While the game app is easy to play, users find that it is very difficult to put down. The simple interface means there's no complicated learning curve, making it faster to become totally involved in trying to get the droplets to hit their correspondingly colored puddle. This app quickly becomes a fun and easy obsession.

The rules for playing Droplets are simple. Once a colored droplet spills out of the overhead pipe, the user has to tilt or rotate their iDevice to guide the droplet directly into the puddle of the same color.

Everyone can play this game, including children. It has been tested and two-year-old approved for fun and learning. Maneuvering the droplets helps little ones to learn their colors while improving eye-hand co-ordination. That's assuming that parents are willing to put it down long enough for their kids to play with it.

Droplets has a built-in scoreboard to help users keep track of their personal best records. There's also a global scoreboard for comparing how a user does with others worldwide. This is a great motivator to raise individual scores and further promotes the addictive aspect of the game.

Each new game level increases the element of challenge. The basic rules stay the same but users will remain interested and hooked on what this Droplets app has to offer, which is a lot for the paltry sum of 99 cents. Droplets is a very affordable and fun obsession.

About Droplets

Droplets is so addicting that you won't notice the time pass. The rules are simple - colored droplets spill out of the pipe and fall down, into the puddles. Your task is to rotate the phone, so the droplet falls directly into the puddle of the same color. This game is simple and intuitive so everyone can play it, regardless of age. Even a two year old (and this is verified)!
